CLASS OF 1868.

1893-1898.

TALBOT JONES ALBERT. Continued practicing law until his appointment as Consul of the United States at Brunswick,, Germany, where he has resided, with his family, since Jan. 1, 1898.

In December, 1895, he became President of the Columbian Club of Baltimore. During his two years of presidency that Club became the most powerful political organization in Maryland. He made the presentation address, and was chairman of the largest delegation which went any great distance to Canton, Ohio, to honor Mr. McKinley as a presidential candidate, in October, 1896. The delegation required five trains of ten passenger cars, and consisted of 2500 representatives of the commercial interests of Maryland.

In 1892 he was a presidential elector for President Harrison, and again in 1896 for President McKinley. His father was president of the republican Electoral College which met at Annapolis 32 years before, and cast its vote for President Lincoln.

In 1896 Governor Lowndes of Maryland appointed him a member of the Board of Supervisors of Elections for Baltimore County, and he became president of the board. In 1894 he became a member of the Athenæum Club of Baltimore.

Geological Survey, as a geologist, and his travels have been to Newfoundland in 1893, to the southern Appalachians in 1894, to Alaska in 1895, to South Africa in 1896, and to California in 1897. His publications, about twenty in number, relate mostly to geology and physics.

Address: U. S. Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

*WILLIAM FREDERICK BENNETT. Born in Brighton, Massachusetts, April 13, 1847. Died in Boston, September 14, 1897, in the fifty-first year of his age.

Our classmate Sweetser furnishes the following summary of Bennett's life:—

His father, Elias Dexter Bennett, died January 30th, 1872. His mother, Almira Wellington Bennett, died November

22nd, 1895. He attended the public schools in Brighton and finished his preparation for college at Allen's English and Classical School at West Newton, Mass. In his autobiographical sketch in our Class Book we may read in his own words what were the fresh impressions left upon his mind by his school and college course, at the time of graduation, in the following sentence. "The pleasant memories and associations, the pleasant acquaintances formed, the many hours given to study, these and many other sources of pleasant recollections, to say nothing of the culture acquired, are more than a sufficient recompense for the time and substance expended."

He studied law at the Dane Law School till the summer of 1870, when he entered an office in Boston. He practiced law till July 1873, and displayed great industry and a faculty for managing business interests which seemed to promise for him a successful career as a lawyer, and which was subsequently turned to good account in the care of the property left by his father.

In August, 1873, after a hemorrhage of the lungs, he went to Aiken, S, C., and remained there through the next winter. After this time he always spent the winters in warm climates, returning to Boston generally for a few months in summer. In 1874 he was at Jacksonville; in 1875 at Santa Barbara; in 1876 in California again; in 1877 in Georgia; the summer of 1878 in Europe; the next winter at Marietta, Ga.; the winter of 1879–80 at Nassau, and subsequently at Marietta. August 3rd, 1880, he was married, in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, to Harriet Van Wyck, daughter of Judge Anthony Van Wyck and Margaret Skeel Van Wyck, who survives him. After a few more winters spent in travelling he built a house, in 1885, at Marietta, the winter climate there seeming, after thorough trial, to be well adapted to his needs.

He took much pleasure in the improvement of his house and grounds, being interested in horticulture, especially in the cultivation of roses. Educational interests claimed his sympathy and help during his southern sojourns, and he was keenly alive to the necessities and progress of the colored people and the poor whites.

Naturally energetic, the enforced surrender of cherished ambitions and of those activities for which he was well fitted by temperament and education, was a severe trial; but he bore this disappointment, as he bore all his frequently recurring attacks of illness, with patient resignation.

Returning strength invariably revived his hope of ultimate recovery, and he frequently rejoiced in being up and at work again; so the struggle for life went on to the end.

Of a genial and affectionate disposition, he was happy in his domestic relations and made others happy. The cardinal virtues of honesty and justice were exemplified in his character and illustrated in all his dealings.

An assured religious faith gave to his mind that serenity which was reflected in his manners and conversation.

*JAMES PHILLIPS FARLEY, Jr. Born in Chelsea, Mass., November 12, 1848. Died in Boston, August 23, 1896, in his forty-ninth year, after an operation for the removal of gall-stones, which disclosed a fatal abcess of the liver.

Farley's grandfather was, at the age of nineteen, in Col. Wade's regiment which marched on to Bunker Hill on the morning of the battle in 1775, together with his brother, and his father Michael Farley, who was a Captain in the Revolutionary Army, and a Major-General in the Massachusetts Militia in 1777–8.

In his youth Farley was devoted to athletic sports, which gave him a vigorous and healthy frame. In college he pulled for two years in his class crew; but he was especially fond of cricket, and his devotion to that game made him its acknowledged leader in the College. Without his enthusiasm for the game it is said that cricket would not have maintained the hold it then acquired at Harvard.

For the Freshman year Farley's rank was 14, attaining 80 per cent in the system of marking then in vogue. His rank for the Senior year was 20, attaining 82 per cent; and for the entire course of four years it was 28, averaging 65 per cent

But from the winter of 1865 until the spring term in 1866, he appears to have been absent from College, owing to a weakness of his eyes during a part of that time. He received "a leave of absence from Dr. Peabody," and for ten weeks he taught a school at Newington, N. H.

He was a competitor for Boylston Prizes for Declamation; and he was elected as the Second Marshal of his Class, at the Class meeting held January 24, 1868. He was a member of the Natural History Society, of the Christian Brethren, and of the O. K.

From August 15, 1868, to September 1, 1869, he studied law in the office of T. C. Wakefield, Esq., 22 School Street, Boston. He then went to the Dane Law School, where he remained until February, 1870, when he entered the office of Hon. R. M. Morse, Jr., at 7 Court Square, Boston. On October 1st, 1870, he was admitted to the Bar, when he at once commenced business for himself at No. 3 Barrister's Hall, Boston, having his office with Alfred Hemenway, Esq., and afterwards for some time with his classmate Jesse F. Wheeler, Esq., at 23 Court Street, Boston.

In 1871 he received the degree of A. M. from Harvard.

He was married May 16, 1876, at Brookline, Mass., to Miss Mary Eliot Wells, eldest daughter of the late Hon. John Wells, a Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, and, becoming a citizen of Brookline, he was elected as a trustee of the Brookline Public Library for three years, from 1877 to 1880. Later his residence was at 54 Bellevue Street, in the Longwood district of Boston.

His wife survives him, and also four children: John Wells, now a Junior at Harvard, Louis Calot, Eliot, and Elizabeth Dwight.

As a lawyer his practice was general. His ability to grasp principles and apply them in corporation cases was recognized, and was successfully shown in his conduct as leading counsel, with New York and Michigan solicitors of the important chancery case of Hoyt v. Centennial Mining Co., concluded in 1896.

As a man he was social, hearty in manner, amiable and indulgent.

ALDEN BRADFORD FARNUM. He is a practicing physician in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and actively interested in sanitary and hygienic questions.

His two daughters, Jessie and Chellis, returned last fall, after two years study in Paris, bringing four first prizes, Jessie standing first in the final examination with the prize of the roll of honor, and Chellis third, with the only prize given for German. It was a fair contest between Anglo-Saxon and Celt.

Address: Room 313 Goldsmith Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

CHARLES OLIN FILES. He is a practicing physician in Portland, Maine.

In 1896, both his son Charles and his daughter Julia were married, the latter on the twenty-fifth anniversary of her father's marriage, the same minister officiating. About two months later his daughter was stricken with pneumonia and suddenly died.

He was to sail for a European trip this spring, with his wife, but the present war has prevented.
